The Nature Institute UK looks to those in the business of art, science and knowledge for creativity, innovation and discovery. It is our ambition to engage artists, scientists and practitioners in vibrant dialogue that celebrates the arts and environment as allies in conservation, and as a constant source of inspiration. The Nature Institute offers a first class programme of talks, masterclasses, tours, laboratory visits, garden events, lectures and talks in the UK and around the world. We are committed to an ambitious programme of social action, notably in the areas of education and natural science, in the UK and internationally. Our primary function is to encourage creative collaboration between people in these areas as we find a common cause in the challenges and opportunities presented by the relationship between the land and people. We believe that a richer exchange of ideas and innovation can take place where people work together rather than working at cross-purposes. The Nature Institute UK is a charity with the purpose of promoting the arts and ecology

The present invention relates generally to the field of computers and software, and more particularly to systems, methods, and computer-readable mediums for performing financial modeling. Financial modeling typically refers to the development of an economic model of a business to represent the economic behavior of the business. Financial modeling is commonly used to evaluate business investments and financial plans. The evaluation of business decisions is commonly performed by using a monetary exchange rate to represent the future exchange rate of the business' currency, as well as a currency of the financial instrument used in the transaction. For example, a request for a loan may result in a future exchange rate of the loan currency (e.g., USD) relative to a borrowing currency (e.g., EUR). Monetary exchange rates may be expressed as an exchange rate between two fiat currencies. Often, a business will be exposed to foreign currency from multiple sources (e.g., domestic and foreign exchange transactions, foreign markets) and will be exposed to several alternative currencies. For example, a retailer may have a store in the U.S. and a store in France. Each store may be exposed to the respective currencies of its own country and the currency of its neighboring country. In order to evaluate business plans and various scenarios of the business, financial modeling techniques may be used to calculate exchange rates and the impact of exchange rate fluctuations on the business. For instance, in the above loan example, the exchange rate would be used to determine how much the U.S. dollar is worth in euros. Different scenarios may be constructed based on different assumptions about interest rates, exchange rates, and so on. The behavior of a business and its effect on its customers may be modeled using different currency pairs, such as USD/EUR or USD/GBP. Player 0 is the main character, and all other characters are targets used by Player 0 in order to make play more interesting. In this sense, they are Player 0's other team members. Though Player 0 is in charge, he is guided by the decisions of his other members. For example, Player 1 may decide to protect a certain target, or to attack the same target. Though it may look like Player 1
